* * * It was to you, not to Mrs. Mallieu, that I addressed my letter, written in consequence of Polly's remark "I think" (or "I believe" I forget which she said) "that Papa took an inch off my heighth, because he wanted to get me an engagement." Had I been writing to your wife I should probably have tried to express myself more gently, but, writing as man to man, it seems to me that plain speaking was best. . . . Now let me express, as strongly as I can, two things I feel about it. The first is, that I most deeply regret all the pain my letter has given, both to your wife and to yourself. The second is, that I most sincerely rejoice that (after several times almost deciding to say nothing about it) I at last said to myself that I ought to write that letter, etc., etc., slight break in folds
